The authors investigated the removal of carbon black (CB) from spent fabrics by using an electrocoagulation (EC) process. Surfactants, viz., cetyl trimethyl ammonium bromide (CTAB) and sodium dodecyl sulfate (SDS), were used to enhance the removal efficiency. Different experimental conditions were investigated to determine the most suitable conditions for removal of CB particles from spent fabrics. The results indicated that the optimum pH for EC process was 1.0-4.0 and the optimal dosage of surfactant was 1.0-1.5 g L(-1). The removal of CB particles increased with increasing initial concentrations of the electrochemical system and a minimum removal of 11.1% of CB from the spent fabrics was achieved after 90 min treatment with the optimum conditions. It was found that CTAB can act as a good neutralizer for the electrochemical oxidation of organic pollutants and increased the removal of CB particles from the surface of spent fabrics by 91.5% compared to that without surfactant. The CTAB/CB/SDS system showed high potential to remove CB particles from the spent fabrics and could be a promising alternative way for treatment of textile waste. R. S. Malhotra Rev. Shri. The company, which has headquarters in Denver, posted $3.83 billion in sales and $400 million in sales growth in fiscal 2013. But thanks to rising costs, the Chipotle division saw its profits plunge 43 percent to $31.9 million. Chipotle's strong performance over the past few years, along with the chain's reputation for being high-quality, high-priced, and even fresh, has made the restaurant experience one of the most valuable assets in the fast-casual market. Chipotle is also known for its consistency, and that's why the company is so vulnerable to changes in its key selling points. The Chipotle brand is about to suffer some serious blows. For starters, the chain has raised the prices of its burritos and burrito bowls as of July 1, from $2.29 to $2.50 to $3.09 to $3.49, depending on the size. At the same time, the chain is shifting its menu focus and cutting back on its "flatbread" category. Former CEO Brian Niccol, who resigned last year after losing out to company co-founder Steve Eells on a top management position, has been making the rounds. He recently suggested the company should get back to its traditional Chipotle menu and make its burritos half the price of its new burrito bowls. "One of the reasons Chipotle is so valued is that it stands for a certain model," Nic
