the pcsos, who are also made of the communities, have been helping us a lot to look for the under-tipped, to ensure that we have enough policemen in the community. that is why we have been able to work with the community. we have been able to identify drug pushers in the community and bring them to justice and we have been able to locate those who are in the community who are involved with the drug trade. this is why, according to ravilla, we are the community's eyes and ears, and this is why we have been able to work with the community. this is why we are able to provide a lot of help to the community. the number of potential recruits continues to rise and we need to ensure that the right individuals with the right skills and attributes are recruited, trained and supported to meet the ever-increasing demands of policing, so this is a chance to make a positive difference in your community. a police service of england and wales spokesman said: "we're urging pcsos to be wary of those who may try and scam them out of money. if you have been contacted by someone claiming to be a pcso who wants your money, we'd urge you to contact the police immediately and report it to action fraud. we're also urging anyone who has been a victim of fraud or identity theft to contact action fraud immediately and report the offence. the spokesman added: "we recognise the vital role that pcsos play in policing, so if you're thinking about becoming a pcso we encourage you to apply. pcsos work alongside regular police officers in the community to support and safeguard local people. they can be based anywhere within the uk and it is not a requirement to live within the area they work."

Pcso Spam Skill

I joined the force in 2001, which a few of my colleagues commented made me a very old PCSO. Throughout my career I have been able to use my cognitive and practical abilities to assist people within the community. I have a very broad and varied range of work experience which I have used to great effect in assisting our officers and victims. Other duties include performing community safety checks, contacting missing persons, locating victims of crime, reporting and assisting with accidents, searching premises for evidence, detecting and arresting criminals and helping members of the public. PCSOs are often the first point of contact for people in distress or reporting a crime. As well as being a community-minded, law-abiding citizen, PCSOs are also able to call on the support of other police officers and fellow volunteers for the benefit of victims and witnesses, ensuring that the right person is able to respond to a crime or criminal incident. PCSOs will often be approached by the public for advice on the law or something else to do with crime or personal safety. They are in a unique position because of their knowledge and experience of the area to be able to advise members of the public effectively. PCSOs are employed in a wide variety of roles. I work as a full-time active PCSO in the Central Division of Merseyside, with a further part-time role in the South West Area. From home, I work voluntarily for the National Police Chiefs Council and in the Community Safety Education Programme. I recently re-trained in the new "Volunteer Police Role", which means I now have the basic tactical skills and have increased use of police powers to help the community. I also have access to the Police National Computer. The chances of me having to work alone have reduced because more police officers are able to help and we are in a different position in that we don't have to have back up by the force. 5ec8ef588b
