Facebook is vying to top Apple with its own social app for the iPad. Microsoft hopes to get a look in with Office Mobile for Windows Phone 7. Amazon.com is trying to outdo Apple by offering an app to run its Kindle e-reader, while Google is hoping to play catch up with its own Android Market. Any of these would be good news for BlackBerry users - if only there were any of these apps available. The various incarnations of the BlackBerry PlayBook's interface haven't made the platform easy to use for people who have been trained on Android and iOS. Even if BlackBerry has managed to jettison its native operating system, there's no guarantee that these apps will ever find their way to RIM's tablet. Saturday, 13 December 2011 I
